4. Read the following passage and answer the questions below: (5 × 2 = 10 marks)

Some students suffer from excessive anxiety, which produces sleeplessness, which in turn aggravates anxiety. If you know from experience that you are the over-anxious type, you must confront the fact and take steps to alleviate it. Allot a fixed ration of time for revision, the rest of the day being spent in exercise and other forms of recreation. Another way of reducing end-of-session flap is to spread the task of learning over the whole year. Spend sometime each week revising the week's material. If your exams start at 9 a.m, make sure that you are physically attuned to that time by keeping regular hours and rising sufficiently early for at least a week before.

Questions:

- (a) What aggravates anxiety?
- (b) To alleviate over-anxiety, how should the day be divided?
- (c) How to reduce end-of-session flap?
- (d) How should the revision be done?
- (e) What steps should be taken for physically preparing for the exams?

PART D — (15 marks)
